Agriculture

The {agriculture sector} has always been important for economic growth and rural employment. Agricultural policies (such as incentives, import tariffs and use of lands) are critical for governments because the products have direct impact on people's daily lives. Companies, on the other hand, seek to find greater production areas with lower labor costs. Population growth and climate change pose additional risks for countries that struggle to keep agricultural products at affordable levels. This sector's emerging trends include farm consolidation and encouraging farmers to use innovative methods to increase overall fertility; however, this transformation is slow and uneven.

StratejiCo. helps agriculture companies and investors grasp market opportunities, find regulatory solutions, and enlarge production areas.
